The architects designed a new single-family house on a 12-acre site that includes stables and a pasture for the owners — a car designer and a dressage instructor. The owners' request also called for an aesthetic that evokes the timelessness of the Mid-century furniture they own. By sticking to simple authentic materials that have been used in construction for hundreds of years, the house avoids the stylistic flourishes that would identify it with a specific time period.

The Community Workshop is a first-of-its-kind collaborative community space located on the second floor of Carhartt's flagship store on Cass Avenue in Detroit. The design was directly informed by the company's core principles of integrity and perseverance, as well as the brand's ongoing support of skilled tradespeople. The design team worked closely with the owners to develop the look.

This Armenian church renovation creates a sense of belonging, is open and inviting, and addresses the multigenerational needs of the congregation. Glass, ornate woodwork, marble, stone, brick, rugs and textiles, and gold accents recall the church's iconic gold dome. Elongated hexagons, a recurring formal motif, are drawn from the shape's use in the sanctuary's woodwork. In the lobby, a 26-foot-long panelized mural by an Armenian artist features images of doves — an important symbol found in the existing altar artwork.

HISTORIC RENOVATION/RESTORATION (50 Years or Older)

"THE ATRIUM AND ITS GLASS DOME ARE THE PARAMOUNT MASTERPIECE OF THE BUILDING."

Nearly every part of the historic Book Tower in downtown Detroit required extensive repair and renovation. The atrium and its glass dome are the paramount masterpiece of the building. The glass dome, originally designed and built by Keppler Glass Constructors Inc., is one of just a few remaining Keppler Glass "crystal ceilings" in the world, and was painstakingly repaired to match the original design.
